POPE SPEAKS ON EVANGELIZATION

The biggest challenge for the Church today, above all in countries with deep Christian roots, is to reintroduce the beauty of Christianity to those who consider it an obstacle to happiness, says Benedict XVI. In his address, the Holy Father reflected that drawing close to those who have fallen away from the faith has become "especially urgent today," and that the Church needs "a new evangelization addressed to all those who, although they have heard talk of the faith, no longer appreciate, no longer know the beauty of Christianity; on the contrary, at times they even view it as an obstacle to achieving happiness."

The Pope stated "Faith is not kept by itself in the world, it is not automatically passed on to the human heart, but must always be proclaimed." The Holy Father added that if "the proclamation of faith is to be effective it must stem in turn from a heart that believes and loves, a heart that adores Christ and believes in the power of the Holy Spirit!" "If people forget God," he continued, "it is partly because the Person of Jesus is often reduced to that of the figure of a wise man and his divinity weakened, if not denied." Benedict XVI noted that thinking of Christ with only "human ideas" is an "obstacle to understanding the radical newness of Christianity."
